Foreword

WE WALK in a world of wonders and marvels, for the most part unseeing, unheeding, each one engrossed in his own little cosmos, whose petty boundaries are circumscribed by his own particular ambitions, desires and aspirations.

"The world is too much with us. Late and soon Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers; Little we see in nature that is ours."

And yet every day is a new miracle. The reddening of the dawn, those gleaming points of light we call the Pleiades, the plaingensis of nature when the springtime comes again, the ceaseless advance and recession of all the tides in all the seven seas, the winds that blow from pole to pole—what wondrous things are these and what tremendous implications they connote.

And there is light—from a thousand suns—which floods the universe with color.

For color comes from beyond the far horizons of the earth rained down upon us in gentle streams of sunlight. The young and vibrant colors of the springtime, the more mature and fuller tones of summer, the golden reds and crimsons of the flaunting autumn, are painted there by golden rays of sunlight. All the world is made beautiful by color. There are the stars like silver jewels in the firmament, the gleaming blue bosom of the restless seas, the green and waving forests, the birds and flowers of a myriad hue.

And so looking out on nature man has considered color and has recognized its potentialities for his own pleasure and utility. He has painted pictures which approach even the sublime inspirations of nature. He has made fabrics and tapestries in far away Tyre so harmoniously woven in colors that the memory of them has reached down even to our own day. And he who has not made his visit to the stained glass wonders of the old cathedrals, holds it in reservation for some future time.

They knew the mysteries of color in the old days—those Maestros of the brush and Artisans in glass.

Ah, Artisans in glass—men of our own fraternity, of inimitable art and teachers, too. And taught by them we also have been coloring glass, not in the dead and drabs effects of yesterday but in vibrant and vivid colors which live and sparkle.

Long ago we learned the science of glassmaking, but today we are also artists in color. Art and science conjoined, therefore, have produced the beautiful and incomparable effects illustrated in this catalogue. The glass shown here connotes, not only the ultimate in the science of glassmaking, but more than that, it represents the highest point yet reached in the art of coloring Illuminating Glass.

The Artisan and the Artist has produced his masterpiece in GILLGLO.
